A Brief History of Sir George Williams College

The present faculties of Arts, Science, Commerce and Pre-Engineering at Sir George Williams College developed from the formal educational work of the Montreal YMCA.

This work, inaugurated in 1873, took the form of evening courses in vocational and general educational subjects and was later co-ordinated into a system of YMCA schools.

In 1920, the evening high school was inaugurated and six years later the name of Sir George Williams College was adopted to designate from that time forward, the expanding formal educational programme of the YMCA in Montreal.

The college was named in memory of Sir George Williams, who founded the YMCA movement in London, England on June 6, 1844 - seven years later it was founded in Canada.

In 1926, the college was made co-educational and two years later, the Montreal YMCA launched a building campaign for the sum of $1, 550,000. Part of the funds were set aside to provide enlarged facilities for the work of the college.

The college's facilities were extended in 1929 to include first years of Arts, Science, Commerce and Pre-Engineering, and in 1930, the college began to expand until this expansion plan was climaxed by the recent opening of the new college building.

In 1931, the Junior College was formed to offer an Associate Diploma and during the next year, Sir George Williams College opened its doors to day students who wished to obtain Associate's degrees.

The two year programme necessary to obtain an Associate's degree was in 1934 extended to a four year course leading to a Bachelor's degree.

The members of this first class graduated in 1936, and in 1948 the College was granted a charter by the Provincial Legislature, establishing Sir George Williams College for the purpose of conducting a university.

In 1952, the College and the Montreal YMCA launched a building campaign for $3,300,000, and the major part of the monies collected provided for the College's new building, which was especially designed to accomodate its activities.

The College occupies the new building on Drummond Street in 1956 and a two-year Engineering program was added to the curriculum in 1959.

TEAM FACTS:

The average height of this year's edition of the Georgians is 6'1" with the average weight being more than 180 lbs. There are seven men from last year's cagers who are returning to the Georgians for the coming season, and Coach Flynn expects the team to turn in a better than average season.

In our intercollegiate records, we find that the Georgians over the past ten years 103 wins to 18 losses and have won the Conference five times during the past ten seasons.

This record has rated Sir George Williams College in the bracket of one of the best small college basketball squads in the Ottawa-St. Lawrence area.
